Four letters, one layout, one file

These four letters share one layout and differ only in who they are for, the seat and the amount. The file tells the press so. Each letter is a part of its own, stating the recipient, the member number, the postcode and the amount due. The letterhead and this note are a single drawing, placed on every page and marked to be rendered once and kept for the whole file. This is variable-data printing: a run of thousands of personal letters sent to the press as one file and printed at full speed.

This copy claims no standard: PDF/VT rests on PDF/X-4, which needs the profile of the press the run is printed on. Give one on the command line and the same file claims both.
